

Freddie Kemp

Growing up in upstate suburbia New York the encouragement to be creative has been prevalent in Freddie's life since his early childhood.

From exploring the woodworking shop in his grandfather's basement to the countless hours spent watching his father design and paint signs Freddie has been exposed to creativity. His interest in drawing began by recreating the pictures from comics and the heroes from his baseball cards. It wasn't until exploring the old damp cellar that his interest in drawing and art took true form. Down in that old damp musty cellar he discovered his father's collection of art books and already classic Conan the Barbarian, Heavy Metal, Creepy, Fear, Epic Illustrated, and Eerie magazines. In awe of the masterful works he found there by such artists as Frank Frazetta, Boris Vallejo, and John Buscema Freddie knew this was the career path he wanted to follow...
